Folk tradition dances on

By ALLISON POND

Authentic music, costumes, and dances from 17 different cultures aren't the only traditions being celebrated at "Christmas Around the World" Friday and Saturday in the Marriott Center. This year, the BYU Folk Dance Ensemble will commemorate a legacy of its own: 40 years of performing "Christmas Around the World."

Many alumni events will be hosted in conjunction with the anniversary. The celebration will also honor Mary Bee Jensen, the founder and first director of the Folk Dance Organization at BYU from 1956 to 1985, said Delynne Peay, associate director of the Folk Dance Ensemble.

"She was our queen bee," Peay said.

As part of the celebration, there will be cameo appearances in the concert by past choreographers and dancers, Peay said.

One number, a Hungarian dance, features an all-male cast that not only dances, but creates all of the music by the dancers slapping their hands and feet.

"The dance is usually made up of seven men. We have an all-star cast this year of 15 guys. We invited every fellow who has ever done the front position in this dance," Peay said.

"It's a real crowd pleaser. It's very manly. In folk dance, the men are men. If other dances don't prove that, this one does," she said.

Other numbers will feature their original choreographers as guest dancers, including a Chinese dance choreographed by Jiamin Huang, a Turkish dance by Ahmet Luleci, and a French-Canadian number with Rene Frenchette.

Peay also said the student dancers have been working for the last month on the technical aspects of the show, doing everything from building the set and the floor, to getting twinkle lights on the trees.

Whitney Debenham, president of the folk dance club, said all of the dancers are asked to be on a committee, and that they are a little more pressed for time than usual.

"This year the set-up was more difficult because of President Hinckley's devotional. Usually we start late Monday night, but this year we weren't able to move into the Marriott Center until after the devotional," she said.

Melody Clinger, 24, a senior from Sacramento, Ca., majoring in recreation management youth leadership, will dance in "Christmas Around the World" for the first time this year.

"I had the opportunity to be on the history committee. I helped put together the scrapbooks that will be on tables for the alumni and other people to look at," she said.

"I was looking through pictures and things from past years, and I saw a familiar face. It was my aunt. She was on the folk dance team in 1964. Now I feel more of a connection to folk dance. I get to carry on the legacy in my family," she said.

Along the same lines, Peay said that "Christmas Around the World" has a symbolic meaning for many people, and that folk dance is meant to be a celebration of all kinds of traditions.

"Folklore is tradition. One of the few things we have as Americans anymore are family traditions that are celebrated for the most part at Christmastime.

That's what we celebrate with folk dance," she said.

Former BYU dancers and choreographers will make cameo appearances in the in the concert in celebration of the 40th anniversary of "Christmas Around the World."

ith the Provo City Attorney's Office and University Police, Perry and Utah Cheerleader Billy Priddis decided not to press charges regarding this event.

Lt. Greg Barber of the University Police said it will be left up to the University of Utah to discipline Priddis.

Priddis' attorney said Priddis defended himself against Perry because he thought security officials would not interfere.

Although no charges will be pressed, Priddis' attorney said when the emotion of the situation begins to cool, they will discuss the possibility of a suit against BYU officials for not preventing the assaults.

"Any one of those people should have offered him help," said attorney Crystal Sluyter. "BYU has a duty to protect visitors when they are invited onto their premises."

However, Jenkins said BYU security staff took proper measures to protect Priddis.

"It is completely false that they didn't try to stop it," Jenkins said. "Security personnel have to use their judgement as to when to come forward, and when the conflict got out of hand, they did."

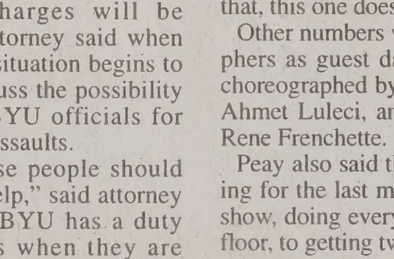
When Ukraine became independent, Buteiko said the decision was made to join Europe as a country.

He said it is mainly hard for the older generation to change their mindset from communism to a more democratic state.

"Only time can help this mindset. After all, before 1991, all the energy was in trying to put everyone into a communist mindset. Now everyone must be converted to a democratic mindset," Buteiko said.



ANTON BUTEIKO

"I am sure Ukraine has contributed greatly to the European Union," Buteiko said.

"We have also contributed to the security of the U.S. No other nation can say it has destroyed more than 2,000 nuclear warheads mainly aimed at cities of the United States," Buteiko said.

He said from the beginning of its independence, the philosophy of Ukraine has been that it would be the home of any ethnic people who wanted to live there.

He said Ukraine has tried to build up and maintain friendly relations with its neighbors, and in a historically short amount of time, Ukraine has built up its foreign service — faster than the rest of the former Soviet Union.

"Russia is one of the only places which has had a hard time accepting our independence. Actually, it has probably been hard for both of us to adjust — for the Ukraine, it was hard to adjust emotionally, which in turn made Russia impatient," Buteiko said.

He said a strategic partnership has now been developed with Russia.

Buteiko answered questions as to the long-lasting effects of Chernobyl.

"Unfortunately, we need a lot of money to close up Chernobyl. We have been promised some money so far but not enough to close it up yet," Buteiko said.

A student raised a question on the cement casing around the Chernobyl plant that is cracking and leaking gases. Buteiko said the cement was cracking because the casing was built too quickly. He said there are special projects under way to remove the harmful substances.

Buteiko said he considers BYU a beautiful campus.

He said he has been informed that BYU is very prestigious, and he has talked with graduates from BYU who are held in high esteem.

"I want to tell you, you are lucky to be at BYU," said Buteiko

Professor Phil Bryson, professor of managerial economics, said he attended the lecture because he is interested in what goes on in Eastern Europe and Ukraine.

"I thought something very interesting in the lecture was Buteiko's explanation on how Ukraine abandoned claims to those nuclear weapons. This act is a tremendous political and historical feat," Buteiko said.

Kira Gulkomorse, 21, from Kiev, Ukraine, a teacher of Ukrainian at BYU, said she was interested in attending the lecture because she teaches a Ukrainian history course and also because she is from Ukraine.

"He gave a great lecture. I think Ambassador Buteiko is a good representation of Ukraine. He performed well," Gulkomorse said.

Scottish Co. buys U.S. electric utility

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — ScottishPower officially took control of PacifiCorp and its six-state service territory in the West on Tuesday, completing the first foreign takeover of a U.S. electric utility.

"This merger marks a significant milestone in the histories of our companies," said Alan Richardson, a Scotsman who became the new CEO of PacifiCorp, based in Portland.

"We set out to complete this merger in under a year and we are delighted to have achieved our objective," Richardson said.

The $7.9 billion acquisition announced last December required the approval of regulators in California, Idaho, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, along with federal approval. Last week, Utah became the final state to grant permission for the deal.

In Utah, which has nearly half of the more than 1.4 million PacifiCorp customers, there had been some wariness about the takeover, officials said.

"I think there initially was a little xenophobia," said Rich Collins, an economist who advises Utah public utility commissioners.

Collins said the takeover of an American utility by a foreign company is unique. "But the economy is becoming more global and ownership is becoming more international."

Ron Law, spokesman for the Idaho Public Utilities Commission, said public reaction to the merger in Idaho also had been initially skeptical.

"There was a considerable amount of nervousness out in the general public," Law said, "and that seemed to be the general theme in a number of hearings here."

Richardson said the task now is to put those concerns to rest, noting that ScottishPower eventually will be about a third-owned by U.S. investors.

He also added a lighter note about the marriage of Western and Scottish corporate cultures: "I want to say clearly that we're not going to have any linesmen with kilts."

The addition of PacifiCorp puts ScottishPower into the top ranks of the world's investor-owned electricity companies with about 7.5 million customers across the West, the United Kingdom and Australia.

nton visits 'war zone' in support of peaceful trade protesters

Associated Press

— As arrests mounted and ard troops patrolled outside, del- 135 nations tried on Wednesday te global trade talks that thou- otesters had brought to a stand-

Clinton condemned the violent ns. But he also warned that the Organization would have to lis- ncerns of the masses of peaceful ho insisted that workers' rights mental protection be taken into ade agreements.

d to project a business-as-usual air, Clinton stuck to a schedule that had him touring Seattle's busy port facilities and delivering a speech touting the benefits of open trade to Washington state apple farmers.

Late Wednesday, he was addressing delegates from around the world who had come here for a world trade group's meeting.

His motorcade traveled on city streets that had the air of a war zone — boarded-up windows, trash on sidewalks and other remnants of Tuesday's violent clashes.

Clinton said the peaceful protests, including 35,000 union workers and their families parading against the WTO, were in "the best American tradition."

"For those who came here to peacefully make their point, I welcome them here because I want them to be integrated into the longer-term debate," Clinton said in his speech at the Seattle port.

"To those who came here to break windows and hurt small businesses, or stop people from going to meetings or having their say, I condemn them," he said.

Seattle police, stunned by the chaos in the streets on Tuesday, called in 200 unarmed National Guard troops and 300 state police to help keep calm Wednesday — and to enforce a no-protest zone in the downtown area. Authorities also had declared a state of emergency and imposed a night curfew.

The police, who saw their efforts to exercise restraint backfire, greatly intensified the pace of arrests, rounding up about 300 demonstrators by early afternoon. That total included 200 demonstrators arrested in a city park just two blocks from Clinton's hotel.

On Tuesday, which was to have been the opening day of WTO activities, demonstrators had rampaged through the downtown area, breaking windows in dozens of buildings, vandalizing patrol cars and buses and setting fires.

Police dressed in riot gear fired pepper gas and plastic pellets into clumps of demonstrators who were blocking streets around the downtown theater where the WTO had planned to hold its opening ceremonies.

In contrast to opening day, the WTO meetings got under way on schedule on Wednesday with more than 1,000 delegates filling chairs in a giant auditorium at the convention center to listen to trade ministers give speeches in support of their negotiating positions.

Meanwhile, the real work of the meetings, which are scheduled to end Friday, was going on behind closed doors.

U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky and other trade ministers haggled over exactly what items would be covered in a new round of trade negotiations the WTO hopes will be launched this week.

Toys R Us kids working too long

WASHINGTON — Toys R Us will pay a $200,000 fine and institute new safeguards in all its stores after inspections turned up some violations of child labor laws, the Department of Labor said Wednesday.

"We found more than 300 young Toys R Us employees working more hours and later into the night than allowed by law," said Labor Secretary Alexis Herman.

The violations involved 14- and 15-year-olds who stock shelves, operate cash registers and clean at 19 New England Toys R Us stores, most of them in Massachusetts.

A spokeswoman for the national toy store chain, based in Paramus, N.J., said it has already taken steps to correct the problems, which she said were the result of misunderstandings of the law by some managers.

Toys R Us will require these young workers to wear color-coded name tags and keep their time cards in a separate place to help supervisors keep track of them.

Vatican-funded project tosses relics

ROME — Fragments of ancient statues, frescoes and other archaeological relics turned up Wednesday at a dump outside Rome, sparking a furor when police traced them to the site of a parking garage being built for the 2000 Holy Year.

Citizens' groups and Italy's Green Party demanded an immediate stop to work on the garage, a government- and Vatican-funded project for the buses that will bring pilgrims and tourists to St. Peter's Square.

"I'm horrified," said Gaia Pallottino of Italia Nostra (Our Italy), a group that has been pushing for the preservation of imperial frescoes found earlier at the same site.

"If this is true, it would ... confirm all our fears on what's going on with the work in that area." Greens Party lawmakers blamed Rome Mayor Francesco Rutelli, an enthusiastic overseer of the city's Holy Year renovations, for his part in "inciting the destruction of part of the historic and cultural patrimony of the capital."

Manifesto labels Arafat corrupt

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Yasser Arafat fended off his sharpest challenge yet on the issue of corruption when Palestinian lawmakers voted Wednesday to censure dissidents who for the first time directly blamed the Palestinian leader for waste, mismanagement and fraud in his government.

The Palestinian legislature argued for nearly four hours behind closed doors over what action to take against the nine lawmakers, who broke a long-standing taboo against personal attacks on Arafat by circulating an anti-corruption manifesto that harshly criticized the 70-year-old leader.

In the end, lawmakers condemned the document and its signatories - but stopped short of lifting their parliamentary immunity, which would have left them vulnerable to arrest and prosecution. Arafat had already ordered the detentions of 11 intellectuals who also signed the document — all non-lawmakers without protection against legal sanctions.

Courts probe church schools' aid

WASHINGTON — Clearly frustrated by a confusing mix of past church-state rulings on parochial aid, Supreme Court justices wrestled Wednesday with a new question: Can taxpayer money be used to buy computers and other instructional materials for religious schools?

"What we've been doing is groping in the direction of identifying forms of aid that run the risk of helping ... inculcate religious beliefs," Justice David H. Souter said in trying to discover some overriding principle in the highest court's previous decisions.

The principle proved elusive during an hour-long argument session involving a case from Louisiana.

The court's decision, expected by late June, may determine the scope of federal efforts to connect every American classroom to the Internet.

The ruling also could provide important insights into how the justices view the use of public money for tuition help to families who send their children to religious schools. Politically charged legal fights over tuition vouchers are being fought in numerous lower courts.

Utah schools against gay issues booklet

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A booklet aimed at helping the nation's superintendents deal with issues involving gay students may not be used in Utah schools, where administrators say it goes against policy.

The state's public schools are prohibited from teaching homosexuality or sex outside marriage as acceptable or healthy lifestyles, Doug Bates, director of school law and legislation for the state Office of Education, said Monday.

"Whether homosexuality is a choice or inborn is not the schools' issue, and schools should stay out of that," Bates said. "So far as respect for people in regards to sexual orientation, that's something I hope we teach."

But Robert Austin, Utah co-chairman of the Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network, said state education officials are missing the point.

"I don't think people understand you don't necessarily have to be an advocate for gay and lesbian rights to be an advocate for safe schools. I think there's a place for some common ground," Austin said.

It could be a tough sell in Utah, where the Salt Lake City School District adopted a ban in 1996 on student clubs not related to academics after students tried to form a school-sanctioned gay club.

But Phyllis Sorensen, president of the Utah Education Association — the state's largest teacher's union — supports use of the booklet.

"I think what it will do is raise awareness of the legal and safety issues of these students and serve as a reminder as to what needs to be going on," Sorensen said.

Cuban boy's family pleads for his return

Associated Press

HAVANA — The maternal grandmother of the 5-year-old Cuban boy who survived a deadly boat accident off Florida has asked the communist government in an emotional appeal to help bring the child back home.

"With greatly mixed feelings and pain caused by all of this, I just want you and our government to help me ... to once again kiss my little Elian," Eleodra Raquel Rodriguez wrote in a letter made public Wednesday.

> "... I just want you and our government to help me ... to once again kiss my little Elian."
> -- Eleodra Raquel Rodriguez, Elian's maternal grandmother

The letter, addressed to Cuban Foreign Minister Felipe Perez Roque, said all four of Elian Gonzalez's grandparents want him returned to Cuba.

Rodriguez's daughter, Elizabet Broton Rodriguez, drowned when the overloaded powerboat she and her young son were traveling in sank last week during the 90-mile crossing to Florida.

Elian was found on Thanksgiving Day, clinging to an inner tube in the waters off Fort Lauderdale. Two other people were also rescued.

Castro's government says it has filed documents with U.S. authorities demanding the child's return.

Florida state courts may ultimately decide whether Elian should be raised in the United States or returned to his father and grandparents in Cuba.

Three more bodies found on drug smuggler's ranch

Associated Press

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico — Working on tips from informants, Mexican and U.S. officials armed with sophisticated technology apparently located the remains of three more bodies south of the Texas border Wednesday, bringing to five the number found in a slow search for some of 100 people missing in the region.

"At this moment we have indications that we have the remains of five persons," Jose Larrieta Carrasco, head of the organized crime unit for Mexico's attorney general's office, told reporters.

FBI forensic experts worked with Mexican soldiers and ski-masked police searching four desert ranches near the border, concentrating on two near Ciudad Juarez, the home base for the Juarez drug cartel, Mexico's largest and most violent drug-smuggling outfit of the mid-1990s.

While U.S. officials say an informant told them as many as 100 bodies might be buried at the ranches, officials now say they don't know how many bodies could be buried there.

Mexican Attorney General Jorge Madrazo has said in several broadcast interviews that he has a list of about 100 people missing from 1994 to 1996 — 22 of them Americans.

Madrazo has repeatedly said that officials do not believe that bodies of U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration or FBI agents are at the ranches. But he said agents of the Mexican federal judicial police could be buried there.

Madrazo has said investigators suspect the victims were killed by the Juarez cartel, which was considered Mexico's largest cocaine-smuggling ring before Carrillo Fuentes died in 1997 during a plastic surgery operation in Mexico City.

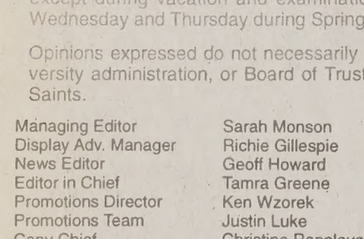
Scripture of the Day

"Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him; for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will."

— Doctrine & Covenants 88:68



Jason Asbury said he likes this scripture because "it says we can have a testimony of God, yet it may not be on our own time but according to the timetable of God." Asbury, 23, is a junior from Cleveland, Ohio, majoring in music and Korean.

ival of Trees raised more illion last year, and has raised more than $11 million since 1971, according to a news release from the Festival of Trees committee.

Much of the merchandise at the Salt Palace was sold Tuesday night in a private auction, with some of the larger trees going for thousands of dollars. At the end of the festival on Saturday night, the purchased trees will be bagged and readied for delivery on Sunday and Monday.

Sharon Geurts has long been involved with the Festival of Trees and now serves on the Alumni Board at BYU. Geurts, along with her daughter, Stacy, serves a shift at the gazebo on the convention floor.

Geurts spent 10 years readying trees for delivery in the Provo area, and said the festival is a wonderful thing.

"The best part is trying to involve the whole community," says Geurts, "It's such a nice way to start the holiday."

Most of the trees are decorated in honor of people who have received treatment at Primary Children's Hospital, and many are dedicated by family and friends to loved ones who have died.

LaRaine Littleford and her daughter, Loralea Anderson come to the festival often. The two natives of Orem say they enjoy the spirit of the occasion.

"I love the atmosphere, and I love the idea," Littleford said.

Anderson said reading the stories and dedications to young people who have died has made her agree with Littleford.

"It's heartbreaking, but so touching at the same time," she said.

Something in the water

It's down to a choice between healthy teeth and stable hips. And if a group of Utah dentists, doctors, health officials and parents gets its way, that choice will go to voters in Utah state counties next November.

The decision of whether or not to put fluoride in county water supplies has turned into a heated issue. Spurred on by polls that indicate many Utahns would prefer fluoride in their water, the coalition known as Utahns for Better Dental Health is pushing to get the issue on county ballots next year.

It's about time.

Utah has the lowest percentage of fluoridated water in the nation — only three percent — compared to the national average of 60 percent.

Utah also has the highest tooth-decay rate among children: 40 percent higher than the national average. Those statistics are too high to be mere coincidence.

Among the arguments against fluoridation are traditional fears of contamination or poison, loss of personal choice, and now concerns about weak hips for senior citizens.

It seems that Brigham City — one of only two cities in Utah that has fluoridated water — has experienced heightened occurrences in hip damage among its elderly residents. It is supposed that buildup from the fluoride, which was added to Brigham City's water supply in 1966, is the culprit.

In a 1992 study by the University of Utah, it was found that in comparing the Brigham City, Logan and Cedar City over-65 populations, that incidents of upper thigh bone and hip fractures were significantly higher in Brigham City, which was the only fluoridated population among the three cities.

This may lead people to wonder if fluoride in our water is worth the possible health risks. Fluoride is technically a poison, but it must be consumed in very large quantities for it to be lethal (you'd have to eat about 100 tubes of toothpaste to consume the toxic 5-10 grams).

There has been speculation for years that fluoride causes brittle bones, cancer and even Alzheimer's disease. There are even speculations that fluoridated water is a government conspiracy. But none of these accusations have earned significant scientific backing or provided enough evidence to suggest that fluoride levels in water supplies do more harm than good.

The fact is, speculations and other reports have failed to confirm a direct cause-and-effect relationship between fluoridated water supplies and suspected ailments.

We can't know all the variables in this situation. But it's unlikely that Utah children floss 40 percent ineffectively than the rest of the nation's children. Utah voters and parents deserve the chance to decide if fluoride in our water is the best alternative for their families.

If the proposition passes in November and you're still suspicious, there's always bottled water.

Four years ago, the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints issued "The Family: A Proclamation to the World." It talks of lawful marriage between a man and a woman, rearing children in a home filled with love, fathers providing the necessities, mothers providing the nurturing, and other commandments from a Divine Father.

I know that my LDS beliefs are not shared by the entire world, but I figured at the time that everyone knew what a family was. Mom, dad, and me, right? I was wrong.

Today's headline in the Salt Lake Tribune reads "Gay Couple Sues for Right to Adopt." Apparently a man and a man constitute a family to some people. If everyone held their same morals, there would be no children to adopt, and no families. Look in your biology book.

I attended the Second World Congress of Families last month in Geneva, Switzerland. Since then, the word "family" could not hide from me even if its name was Waldo.

This week the World Trade Organization may attract a Cougar Stadium-size crowd of protesters. They are armed with signs, costumes, and gas masks to protect themselves from police protecting the WTO.

There were no protesters in Geneva. Anti-family activists are much more subtle. They are armed with the right to choose abortion, same-sex marriage, government-mandated day-care, and anything that may draw a mother away from her children at home.

Geoff Howard
News Editor

President Gordon B. Hinckley highlighted a mother in his BYU devotional speech on Tuesday. Her greatest accomplishment was not in a church calling, or at her workplace. It was in the home where she taught her children faith and moral values.

I took three things away from the WCFII: 1) The family is important, 2) The family is under attack, and 3) There is much pro-family work to be done.

The work to be done starts in my own home.

I was adopted by a wonderful mother and father. They raised me with love and moral values. Dad taught me hard work in the office or at home. Mom taught me to say "thank you" and "I love you." I would be only half the person I am without the natural differences of mom and dad.

Four years ago, the First Presidency warned of the calamities that would follow the disintegration of the family, and I did not understand.

Today, I think their message arrived just in time.

In Step with BYUSA

By Eric Perry and Sharon Varga
BYUSA president and vice president

Whether you were here or not in 1995 probably doesn't matter. At one time or another you have probably heard the popular BYU aphorism, "Cougars don't cut corners."

The phrase was coined by 1995-1996 BYUSA president Wes McDougal as part of his theme to encourage students to be their best, go the extra mile and, among other things, avoid the grass.

Avoid the grass? Would BYU administrators actually discourage students from going on the grass? Certainly not. Grassy areas have purposely been designed and preserved for the enjoyment of students, in terms of both aesthetic and utilitarian value. The issue is that many grassy areas are often quickly trodden into mud because of short cuts.

"There are certain parts of campus we try to preserve as open space," said Bruce Maw, BYU's campus landscape architect. "Around those areas we deliberately provide hard surface for pedestrian traffic."

Unfortunately, people often go further than using the grass for studying, socializing and playing catch; corners of lawns are frequently transformed into pedestrian freeways. As Maw observes, "Students have a tendency to pick the path of shortest distance."

When an innocent short cut across the grass becomes frequently used, a hard trail develops which literally destroys the grass and becomes an eye sore. What's more, each year they cost the university a lot of money.

Paths cut in the grass by 30,000 odd students are just about impossible to repair. While grass can be cordoned off and allowed to grow undisturbed, laying new sod is often the only answer, a solution which amounts to thousands of dollars of unnecessary expense every year.

The campus planning office and the grounds crew work hard to beautify campus for students and visitors. Students should be respectful of their efforts and avoid destroying their work.

For the most part, a lack of awareness seems to be the problem. Students are here to study and remain inundated with a variety of deadlines. With the constant barrage of pressing issues, it is understandable that one might be a little absent-minded at times.

In fact, according to Maw, when most students are asked why they cut across the grass or through a flowerbed instead of using a sidewalk, their responses go something like, "Oh, I guess I wasn't thinking."

Of course there are those who might also reply, "What? It's shorter this way! What's the grass doing here in the first place?" Ironically, they are probably the same students who complain that there is too much stone and concrete in the new quad.

Don't have the impression that we consider anyone who walks on the grass to be morally deviant. We would simply encourage all to be considerate of the time and expense spent to make BYU beautiful.

We were recently approached by administrators for our thoughts on how to address this issue. The truth is, we need students' ideas on how to solve the problem. Please reach us with your ideas on how to keep Cougars from cutting corners by e-mailing us at byusa@byu.edu. We promise you an immediate response.

Engaging

Cheers to whoever wrote the editorial "Engaging China" in Tuesday's paper, which faces the truth of the U.S./China trade situation. Past sanctions have had little or no effect, and are even less likely to change China in the future. The government should continue to allow people to choose on the basis of their own conscience whether to trade in and buy from China.

Historically, the best way to change an authoritarian regime has been to change the economic base of the country in question. Examples of this abound from England, to the Dutch, to certain areas in Japan during its Warring States period. The best way to change China is to enrich it and educate it, not to cut it off and isolate it.

Not as important

In response to the opinion article "Engaging China," I would like to say that while I am a supporter of unrestricted world trade and while I agree with China's admission into the World Trade Organization, I disagree with the importance everyone seems to attach to China as an economy and as a nation.

China is home to one fifth of the world's population. This leads to the old argument reiterated in the Universe, that if all those millions of Chinese citizens bought our oranges, the U.S. would get rich. I admit that there is a certain logic in this argument. But it is flawed thinking. How exactly are the Chinese supposed to pay for all those oranges? With Chinese currency, which is nothing more than a product of their own economy.

The Chinese economy has consistently failed to deliver for the past 150 years and today constitutes a relatively minor share of the world market when its gross domestic product ranking was 81, just ahead of Georgia and trailing Papua New Guinea. Its per capita gross national product ranking was 65, ahead of Jamaica and behind Latvia. China is not an economic powerhouse.

Actually, the important question is not how many oranges we can sell there, but how willing our businesses are to invest in China. Apparently, not much. In 1997, China received $45 billion in foreign direct investment, but 80 percent of it came from ethnic Chinese living in other nations. The United States and European Union investment in China is actually a little less than their investment in a major Latin American country.

One of the big lessons of the recent Asian economic crisis was that Asia, with the exception of Japan, didn't mean nearly as much to the world economy as everyone said it did. China matters little outside of Asia and it has been rather pathetic watching the Clinton administration bend over backwards to appease Chinese demands. China has been given credibility it just doesn't deserve.

Recycling results

I am one of 12 freshman biology students from Dr. Gary Booth and Dr. Rodney Horrock's biology 100 classes that have been studying energy conservation as our service learning theme this semester. Our goal was to understand the BYU recycling program and identify areas for improvement. We wanted to give the student body some of the information that we found and hopefully cause them to think about their recycling habits.

First, we want to commend the BYU recycling program. It is run by Mr. Bill Rudy. The recyclables placed in bins around campus are collected and taken to an off-campus facility where they are sorted and then shipped to commercial recycling facilities. In an average week, BYU recycles 9.3 tons of cardboard, 4.4 tons of newspaper and 1.7 tons of white paper. Additionally, because recyclers pay for these commodities, BYU recycling covers all of it's costs and even makes a little revenue.

So everything is swell, right? Not exactly. The problem is that BYU students are not taking full advantage of this great program. Our service learning group sorted through 826 pounds of garbage taken from JKHB dumpsters. We found that, by weight, only 55 percent of this garbage actually belonged in the garbage can. The rest could have easily been recycled. Office paper made up 20 percent of the trash, glass 10 percent, newspaper eight percent, and plastic, cardboard, aluminum and green waste made up between one and two percent each.

What can be done? RECYCLE. That is all, really. Take an extra 30 seconds to drop this paper in a recycling bin rather than a trash can. There are over 2,700 recycling bins across campus; they are never too far away.

The Daily Universe itself can do a lot to improve by limiting the amount of paper it uses. We went to 29 of The Daily Universe distribution locations for eight days after 4 p.m. and found an average of 2,972 extra papers. One day there were 3,471 extras. This concerns us for two reasons: first, the excess papers are obviously a waste of resources, but secondly, these papers are paid for with university (tithing and donation) funds that ought to be spent efficiently.

We have spent a lot of time and energy on this project. We love BYU and we love this beautiful God-given earth. It is our hope that, through this project, we might inspire some changes in recycling habits at BYU. Will you change your habits? Will you recycle this newspaper? Thanks.

Derek Moulton
Sammamish, Wash.

Editor's Note

All copies of The Daily Universe not picked up by the time our subsequent issue is distributed, are recycled. Our overages are carefully monitored and shifted to accommodate changing traffic patterns on campus. It is no advantage for The Daily Universe to print more newspapers than are needed for distribution. Also, The Daily Universe is primarily self-supported through advertising revenue, not tithing dollars. Regardless of the sources of revenue, however, NewsNet carefully shepherds its resources and expenses, as does any good business operation, to best serve our audience.

Grammar indeed

In response to the letter attacking a grammar error in The Daily Universe, I would like to point out one flaw. The last sentence asked, "What is the ACT test weeding out, anyway?" The fact is, ACT is an acronym for American College Test. Thus, "ACT test" is clearly redundant. May I merely suggest that one should correct their own mistakes before hypocritically pointing out others'.

Double standard

I have dark facial hair, a "five o'clock shadow" that surfaces before noon, and extremely sensitive skin to boot. On my mission I would shave twice a day to keep a clean appearance, but the clean shave left me sporting a blotchy rash in its stead.

When I returned to BYU I thought that if anyone deserved a "beard card" it was me. After all, I wasn't trying to be rebellious — I just needed a few days between shaves so that me skin didn't erupt.

I scheduled an appointment with our family GP (also a prestigious BYU team doc) and went in with all the necessary paperwork. I was informed by my physician that he could not sign the card for me because he wasn't a dermatologist and that only a specialist could sign the forms for me. "Unless, you're an athlete," he said, "then I could sign the forms for you. I am allowed to sign cards for team members." Hmmm, I thought, as I scratched my stubbly rash. Not another clear example o standard at our beloved university.

It's not that I'm against athletes rec ferent" treatment. I just wish that s authority), would admit it and stop that "everyone" is treated the same.

Well, Doc did solve my problem: razor. It doesn't shave very closely that's the point. Now, I can honestly that I shaved this morning and he playing by all the rules — at least t print.

Portable planters provide spots for trees in quads

Jennifer Parrish/Daily Universe

By JESSICA OROZCO
jessica@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The quads around the Wilkinson Student Center are in the process of coming to life as a variety of trees, shrubbery and seasonal plants are being installed.

The plant life will be put in Lee Lane, Brigham's Square and Wilkinson Way, said Roy Peterman, director of Grounds Maintenance.

Peterman said there will be about 70 trees, including six trees that will be in portable planters.

Bruce Maw, a landscape architect for the Planning Department, said the portable planters will allow the trees to be easily moved for major events. The planters are about seven feet in diameter and three feet in height.

The planters will partially fill the space that is available in the quad areas. Maw said the main purpose of the addition is to make the ample space more visually interesting.

Maw said when he was considering what kind of trees to use, he decided to implement a variety of types and colors.

One type of the tree that is going to be planted is the Frontier Elm, a type of tree that is found no where else on campus, Maw said.

Maple trees, honey locusts and oak trees will also be planted, Peterman said.

In the future, the trees will grow to create a sort of canopy that will shade part of the quad areas, Peterman said.

Christina Remington, 23, a senior from Salt Lake City, majoring in theater, said the trees will help unify the feel of campus.

"I think it will definitely beautify that area. It needs something like that so it can match the rest of our beautiful campus," Remington s

One of the reasons that m plant life will be added is to l vehicle access to the portion of Wilkinson Way that is above underground tunnel, Maw said. a safety issue, he said.

Prior to Thanksgiving, Peter said he hoped to start the pro after the break. However, he s he is behind schedule because grounds crew is understaffed about 100 people.

Peterman said he understands lack of help, though.

"Students have to concentr more on studying," he said.

Project focusing on student services

Compiled by BRENT HARKER

The Vista Project is a huge undertaking. It involves a complete review of student services from pre-admission through alumni. The President's Council created the project with the goal of developing a student services management system or model by the end of 2001 that improves the delivery, coordination and integration of services to students.

It is only logical that students should play a major role on the Vista Committee. Six students have been busily engaged during Fall Semester.

Karen Duffin, a public relations major and former BYUSA vice president, has been a committee member for much of this year. She helped with the creation of the committee's management plan, and she serves on the communications task force. Duffin has also conducted interviews, or site visits, with student service providers at other universities.

Geoff Landward is not technically a student right now.

He recently graduated with a degree in sociology and is applying to law school.

Landward serves as an administrative assistant to the committee, and he established and maintains its Web site. He also keeps the committee leaders organized.

Audrey Perry is a public relations major who serves on the communications task force.

Carrie Reinfurt, also a public relations major, played a major role in drafting the committee's communication plan. Like Duffin, she has conducted site visits at other universities; and she, too, was involved in the formulation of the committee's management plan.

Dan Schoeni is a philosophy major. He is involved with the assessment task force and has conducted focus groups. He also has participated in data analysis.

Mat Whoolery is a graduate student in the McKay School of Education. He also serves with the assessment task force and has participated in the design and analysis of research projects.

The Vista group is committed to understanding the student viewpoint as it studies student services. Students will continue to fill important positions on the committee, and the group will continue to seek student opinions through focus groups, town meetings, and research studies.

To learn about the Vista Project, visit its Web site, www.byu.edu/vista. To make suggestions or ask questions, write to vista@byu.edu at any time, or call 378-1302.

SVC program allows BYU students to earn credit and learn about history

By KRIS BOYLE
kris@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Southern Virginia College is offering BYU students a chance to earn credit while getting a taste of history.

SVC, a four-year private institution located in Buena Vista, Va., will provide the Semester in Virginia program during Spring Term 2000. The program, which is in its second year, begins May 1 and ends June 17, said Johnell Swan, public relations director at SVC.

For the first time, BYU students who take credits that correspond to the curriculum at SVC can transfer them to BYU credit, Swan said.

Students participating in the program will visit sites like Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson; Appoxmattox, the site where Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant signed the surrender agreement ending the Civil War; Washington, D.C.; and Lexington, the home of Virginia Military Institute and Washington and Lee University.

Swan said other sites students will visit include Natural Bridge, the Blue Ridge Parkway and the Shenandoah Valley.

The cost of the program is $1,650 and includes tuition for six credits, room and board, and transportation to the historical sites, Swan said. Those interested in taking more than six credits can for an extra $150 per credit hour.

The location of the school provides students with many first-hand experiences of historical events, said SVC President Curtis Fawson in a news release.

"We have such a treasure of American historical sites surrounding SVC. We wanted to allow other students opportunities to take advantage of this special offer," Fawson said.

Swan said a primary purpose of the program is to create a partnership between the two schools. She said that both SVC and BYU have qualities that can enhance each other.

"We have common goals: We're not in competition with each other," she said.

The institution was founded in 1867, but became financially unstable and lost its regional accreditation in 1996. That same year, a group of Virginia businessmen and educators reopened the school. They established the focus on the principles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, though it's not owned or operated by the church, Swan said.

Swan said SVC is similar to church-owned institutions in that it has an honor code, Devotionals and forums, and college wards. But she said what makes SVC unique is its size. The maximum capacity at SVC is 350 students. She said 313 students are currently enrolled for Fall Semester.

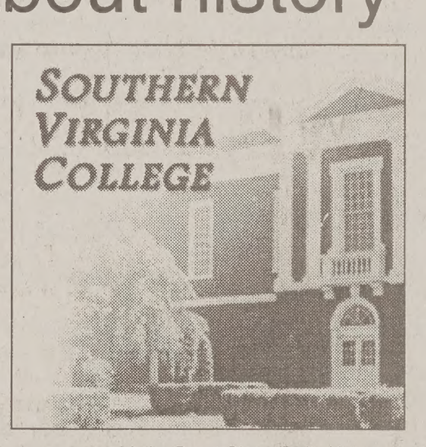
Because of this, Swan said professors can work one-on-one with students.

"It's a very personal, family type atmosphere," Swan said.

Kindee Nielsen, a SVC graduate from Salem, Utah County, said the size is what she enjoyed most about the school. Nielsen said she was a student at BYU for a semester before attending SVC from 1997 to 1999.

Nielsen heard about the school from friends and decided to spend a semester there after she was offered a scholarship.

She said she loved it so much she decided to stay.



graphic by Brant Clater/Daily Universe

"It's such a small school, so every person is important," Nielsen said.

According to Nielsen, BYU students can benefit from participating in the Semester in Virginia program.

"It would be the greatest academic experience of their lives," Nielsen said.

Those interested in the program can contact the Admissions Office at 1-800-229-8420.

"Inevitably, I always take out a couple students with my backpack as I walk down the narrow aisles," said Jenny Youngquist, 19, a sophomore from St. Paul, Minn., with an undeclared major.

"To top it off, people leave their bags in the narrow aisles and I always trip," Youngquist said. "The Testing Center just needs to widen their aisles to solve the problems."

However, Jana Parker, 21, a senior from Fresno, Calif., majoring in health, said she fears if the Testing Center widens its aisles then it will have to decrease the number of seats.

"There are never enough seats as it is," she said.

A testing center employee hands a student her test and gives her directions for taking it. Despite the fact that the Heber J. Grant Testing Center is one of the largest college testing centers in the nation, many students feel that the facility is too small.

Lewis J. "Bud" Wood, manager of Testing Services, said the Testing Center staff does what it can to meet people's needs.

"We try to accommodate students' concerns where reasonable," Wood said.

Wood said the Testing Center is working on solutions to the narrow aisle problem.

"Someday, I would like to see lines that would define the aisles in the testing center similar to the lines that are on the carpet where students stand in line awaiting their tests," Wood said.

According to the Testing Center Web site, the Testing Center distributes more than 800,000 tests per year, and with this number it is important to accommodate all of the students.

Art students sell their wares

Students from the art department are offering BYU students an alternative for gift-giving this year — original art.

The Art History Association on campus is sponsoring a two-day student art exhibition in the Harris Fine Arts Center's third floor lobby today and Friday.

Anastasia Rees, a graduate student from St. Petersburg, Russia, studying art history and co-president of the Art History Association, said the exhibition gives students a chance to showcase their work.

"We want to give art students the opportunity to show and sell their work. We also want to give other students the opportunity to own real art work as opposed to mass produced items," Rees said.

Although art students are heavily encouraged to enter, the exhibition is not limited to them, Rees said.

"Anyone with artistic or creative output may enter," she said.

Rees said 80 percent of the funds generated from the exhibit will go to the artist and the remaining 20 percent will go to the Art History Association.

She said she has been pleased with the art exhibition sale in the past and has purchased several art creations. Rees wants to remind students that art is a good investment.

"Art appreciates — who knows, maybe you'll buy something from someone who will be famous one day," Rees said.

Karen Whitney, a graduate student in art history from Los Angeles, and director of the Art Resource Center, said she is pleased with the entries for this year's exhibit.

"We've moved into the big time. We have more entries this year than ever before," Whitney said.

The entrees include lithographs, photography, water colors, oil on canvas, handmade books, jewelry and ceramics.

Whitney said the ceramics are always her favorite.

"Ceramics are accessible, practical, good quality and just fun to have," she said.

Elaine Bush, an artist contributing to the exhibition sale, said she enjoys entering because she has the opportunity to show others her work and accumulate pottery.

She said low fire terra cotta ceramics are her favorite because they show the design of the clay.

The exhibition is accepting art until Friday in the Art Resource Center, A Wing of the Harris Fine Art Center.

"After taking this class, I don't even want to attend graduate school anymore," Walker said.

Scott L. Howell, director of the center of instructional design, said the accounting program is an isolated experience. He said the old online versions of the class were among the earliest and are in need of revision.

"We are redoing it from top to bottom," Howell said. He said the comparison between the old and the new course is like night and day.

Norm Nemrow, professor of accounting, said although he was never involved with the previous accounting program for Independent Study, he is interested in improving it.

Nemrow said he is currently working with Kevin Stocks to create a newer and better online accounting course.

"It will be a completely different product and approach," Nemrow said.

He said the old program required students to read a book, learn it on their own, and that was it.

With the new program, Nemrow said he will be giving lectures through a CD ROM program with graphic representations and other added features.

"My goal is to create the continuing education class online that will be the same as the class on campus, which I intend to make excellent in every way," Nemrow said. He said the program will not be implemented until next spring.

Howell said the new accounting course will be one of the finest in the country.

Howell said a majority of students say they experience an equivalent education through online courses and Independent Study.

Fire Dept. merger causes sparks

By DERIC C. NANCE
deric@newsroom.byu.edu
TV/FM Associate Producer

Although there has been talk of police consolidation since Salt Lake City Mayor Ross "Rocky" Anderson was elected, it is the consolidation of fire departments that has become the hot topic.

Salt Lake City has 11 different fire departments with nearly 50 fire stations. Salt Lake County Fire Captain Bill Brass said consolidation would join all departments into one metro force to serve the needs of the community more efficiently.

Brass said any geographical division or boundary between the city and the county is essentially invisible in one continuous metropolitan area.

When Salt Lake residents drive down State Street, they drive through five different fire districts with five different bureaucracies, Brass said.

Given the heterogeneous nature of the city and the county, Brass said it makes little sense to have several departments. It is more efficient financially and equipment wise to have one fire department, he said.

When emergencies happen on the border-line of cities, many times another city's fire department may be closer, Brass said. Response times for emergencies will improve with a county-wide metro-fire department because the closer department would be able to respond, he said.

The argument is a unique one because politicians are against consolidation and most residents are for it, Brass said.

"People don't care who responds to an emergency or what color the truck is, as long as one comes quickly," he said.

> "People don't care who responds to an emergency or what color the truck is, as long as one comes quickly."
> — Salt Lake County Fire Captain Bill Brass

West Valley Fire Captain Van Summers said there are a lot of misconceptions about consolidation and that it's not necessarily a good thing.

"When you start putting city and county departments together cost will go up and efficiency will go down," Summers said.

Other cities that attempted consolidation have discovered higher taxes, more bureaucracy, and fire departments not nearly as responsible, he said.

Salt Lake Valley has 17 county fire stations that cover various locations around the city.

Summers said consolidation would only make an existing tax problem worse. Money is taken out of West Valley and other larger cities for a county fire department and is spent in other cities, Summers said.

"We want the choice to continue or discontinue county fire protection, he said. "If we choose to discontinue that protection we could use that money to build a strong city fire department."

On the other hand, Summers said smaller cities are paying for county fire protection, but are not paying for the true cost of services. They should be paying the full price for the level of service they are receiving, he said.

Oliver Moore, West Valley City Fire public information, said the people's voice would be lost in a county-wide metro-fire department.

Twenty-seven years ago, West Valley residents pulled away from the county to create a city so their voice could be heard, Moore said. A consolidated fire and police force would be moving the people back into the direction they don't want to go.

The county has recently tried to consolidate its emergency communications and criminal record keeping with the valley's municipalities. Other consolidation efforts include the city-county health department, the jail, and land fill operations.

But Salt Lake City Fire Captain, Devin Villa, said there are no formal large scale fire department consolidation discussions at the time.

Leavitt reorganizes rights commission

By RUSS HILL
russ@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Although Utah may not be home to many ethnic groups, Gov. Mike Leavitt believes it is important for all residents of the state to remember Martin Luther King Jr.'s message.

On Tuesday, Leavitt signed an executive order that reorganized the state's MLK Human Rights Commission.

The commission had been in disarray because of a lack of funding and leadership, said Community and Economic Development Director Kerry Bate.

"We are committed to the success of the Utah Martin Luther King Jr. Human Rights Commission," said Leavitt.

"We believe the new executive order strengthens the commission's ongoing commitment to human rights."

As part of the reorganization, Leavitt appointed Kitty Stewart to head the commission.

She has worked with various ethnic groups in Utah and was a staff member at the Black Affairs Division.

Stewart is a life-long resident of Utah and grew up in Ogden. She said she was likely chosen for the leadership position because of her ability to get things done.

"I'm an organizer. I don't like the spotlight, I just like to get things done," Stewart said.

Leading a human rights commission in Utah is probably more difficult than holding the same job in a more racially diverse state, she said.

"It makes it tougher, but our message is the same no matter who is listening," Stewart said.

That message is one of tolerance and of understanding the differences between racial groups.

Her first priority is to line up speakers for Human Rights Day in January 2000, she said.

Those speakers will address state lawmakers during an event that is being planned.

Stewart said Utahns need to remember King's message, which is one of hope and acceptance.

"He knew that we could all live together in peace and that someday everyone would be color blind," Stewart said.

"He knew that we would be able to ignore the differences in skin tones and instead focus on what is inside."

Utah County seeks road funds

Associated Press

PROVO — Utah County leaders say one of their most pressing problems is how to curb growing traffic gridlock.

"We seem to be so far behind the curve on transportation issues," Utah County Commissioner Gary Herbert told Gov. Mike Leavitt. "We've got to address transportation in some better way. We've got to have more money or something because we are just falling behind."

Leavitt met with leaders of Utah County and its cities Monday in a 90-minute round table discussion.

Provo Mayor Lewis Billings asked the governor for money to accelerate construction projects.

The city must begin construction to widen Geneva Road and Interstate-15 between University Avenue and Center Street before August of next year, Billings said. Otherwise, the city would likely end up in violation of stricter air quality standards that go into effect in 2001, he said.

If Provo can't finish the projects in time and winds up violating the new Environmental Protection Agency standards, the city will not be able to get federal funds to complete construction, he said. That could delay the projects several years, and the city still would not be in compliance.

It's a problem facing 16 other road projects in Utah County and 18 in Salt Lake County. Billings and 27 other Utah County leaders have already asked Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) to support national legislation that would grandfather such transportation projects and give them immunity from the new EPA standards.

"We would really like to have guidance and cooperation from the state," said Billings.

Leavitt was sympathetic but noncommittal. "If we can, we ought to do that," he said.

Over the next three years about $3.8 billion will be spent to build or renovate Utah highways, Leavitt said, but it still will not be enough to eliminate traffic congestion.

"It's just a fact," Leavitt said. "We have more needs than we have money."

Other current exhibitions include BYU's permanent collection, "150 Years of American Painting," and "Presage of Passage: Sculpture for a New Century."

Community Celebration of Christmas is not only an effort to offer the community a chance to come and enjoy the museum, but it also is an opportunity to serve.

"We've encouraged people to donate time, money — different things to support the event.

Also, as part of each year's celebration, the museum uses the ornaments the kids make to decorate a Christmas tree and donate it to someone in need, McCann said.

"Last year we gave it to the Women and Children in Crisis Shelter," McCann said. "This year, we'll give it to a family in the community."

Families are the focus of the Christmas festivities.

"We really like to encourage families to spend time together and hope that the museum is a place to do that," McCann said.

Tickets are available at the Museum of Art Information Desk or by calling 378-4322.

Admission for Museum Passport holders and Kids Club members is free.

I now realize that if I was wearing thin over Thanksgiving, then during Christmas I'll be wearing thinner than the hair on the back of my head these days (some people have bad hair days, I have no hair days. Lately I've been combing my hair with a damp face cloth).

This Christmas vacation, I'm going in with a plan. If I want to get out of work around the house, yet still look like a good guy, I'm going to have to do a lot of Christmas shopping. That's one excuse no one can refute. To really make shopping last, though, I'm going to go for the impossible to find items — like Pokemon cards or Jimmy Hoffa's body.

It's what everyone else is doing. No longer do people go and get what their kid wants, now they have to find the most elusive toy out there. I like to refer to this as the "Indiana Jonsies." Beanie Babies, Cabbage Patch dolls, Tickle-Me-Elmo, Furbies, all elusive Holy Grails of our times. If the Cross of Coronado was on QVC for $199.95, do you think Indiana would have cared?

Why do you think pirates buried their booty? It wasn't accruing interest underground.

They needed something to look for later. For this same reason it seems I am constantly subconsciously "burying" my keys and the TV remote in unknown spots for the later thrill of looking for them.

I like to think of myself as an adventurer, a discoverer. I like fruit on the bottom yogurt because I get a keen sense of accomplishment when I find the fruit. When I climb the stairs next to the RB, I like to pretend I'm scaling Everest (When I hit the top of the stairs, I usually hold my breathe until I walk past the SWKT so that nobody sees me wheezing.)

Since Logan (my hometown) probably doesn't offer too much in the way of "adventure" shopping, I'll have to make do with the next best thing: Deseret Industries.

I got hooked on D.I. my freshman year when my roommate Joe and I pooled together five bucks (you know you're good friends when you don't worry about each guy paying 50 percent and you just see what you have together. Although I'm pretty sure I ponied up at least $3.75) and bought a record player.

The beauty of D.I. is that you never know what's going to be there. If you're looking for excitement, try sifting through a million "Saturday's Warrior," "My Turn on Earth" and Herb Albert and the Tijuana Brass records as fast as you can, looking for a Neil Diamond's Greatest Hits album before someone else finds it first.

It's not about saving a few bucks, it's about the excitement of the unknown. Now some of you out there are thinking that you don't want to have to wait to buy that certain book that you've been wanting to read.

To this I ask, "When you pulled this said book off of the shelf at Barnes and Noble, knowing full well that it would be there, did you proceed to take a victory lap around the store with your index finger stuck high in the air as you chanted 'I'm number one!' and 'Who's the Man?'" I didn't think so.

When I find that certain book at D.I., I get that same excited discovery feeling that you get when you can finally tell the difference between the "Smokey and the Bandit" movies and the "Cannonball Run" movies. (They both have Burt Reynolds driving around eluding police. I'm pretty sure, though, one of them has a chimpanzee or Sally Fields. I forget.)

So I plan on spending my Christmas vacation finding obscure gifts for my family. In fact, I'd start right now if I could just get the energy to get out of this chair. I went for a double helping of the protein-o-riffic leftover Thanksgiving chocolate mousse pie, and I figure it's only a matter of time until I start feeling great.

Tabloids talk back

Associated Press

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. — When it comes to institutional images, tabloid newspapers are right up there with HMOs, personal injury attorneys and, perhaps, snakes in the grass.

Mainstream journalists look down on them, celebrities try to sue the pants off them, and just about everyone glances over their shoulder before sneaking a peek at them in the checkout line at the grocery store.

How bad can they be?

National Enquirer editor Steve Coz was given a rare opportunity to answer for his sins and the relentless pursuit of that juicy detail at a recent privacy-and-the-press forum at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library.

Instead, he called celebrities to task, characterizing some of them as whiny babies who want it both ways: self-promotion and privacy, too.

"There's a $5 billion-a-year machine out there that exists to sell an image. And whether it's true or not, it doesn't matter. It exists to get the public to buy the image so celebrities can accumulate more power, influence and money," he said.

These media manipulators are fair game, he said, bristling at suggestions the media is invasive with its celebrity coverage.

"It's one thing to be invasive and another to be scrutinizing," he said. "I think when that line between the word privacy and scrutiny gets blurred is where the media takes a bashing."

The increasing intersection of politics and celebrity — Donald Trump, Jesse Ventura, Warren Beatty, Alec Baldwin, even Cybill Shepherd — requires aggressive coverage of what was once considered the private lives of public figures, the 42-year-old editor said.

"There is a sense we are going through the looking glass when it comes to politics and the media (because) we have politicians who have become celebrities and celebrities who have become politicians," Coz said.

"As we move through this looking glass, there is a benefit to the Enquirer because we have already gone through that looking glass."

And they are using the word privacy to control the public, he said.

Band Jibe jives with a groovy vibe

By SHAWN HAMMOND
shawn@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The seriously soulful local band Jibe must have chosen its name out of the realization that it jives with a vengeance and has an undeniably groovy vibe. Naturally, the only real name choice was an amalgam of the two words "jive" and "vibe."

I'm stoked to say that Jibe's debut release, "Got to be There," on the Orem-based Soularium Records label, is yet another gloriously satisfying testament to the continual diversification of our ever-expanding local music scene.

Music Review

A songwriting duo that features local session and stage bass guru Craig Poole and singer/keyboardist Rob Wannamaker from Toronto, Canada, Jibe sounds a lot like Seal and his producers teamed-up with Sade's band and '70s soul/r&b/disco legend Chic. However, as an avid avoider of disco, let me assure fellow disco detractors that "Got to be There" kicks.

To conjure their magic on "Got to be There," Poole and Wannamaker enlisted the help of some pretty stellar studio cats like local greats Rich Dixon, Mike Dowdle, Todd Sorensen, Sam Cardon and Moana Wolfgramm (of Jets fame).

The album's title track is a laid-back, Motown-approved tune driven by patiently poppin' bass lines, simple-but-funky drum grooves and wonderful vocals, both on the part of Wannamaker and the backup vocalists.

"I Should Know That" is another great tune, opening with dizzying vintage keyboard-work that dodges back and forth from speaker to speaker before Wannamaker's velvety vocals jump in, backed by Poole and Sorensen's inescapable funk foundation. With its robot-voiced background vocal clips, hip horn breaks and moderate dispersal turntable scratching, the tune creates a nice marriage of yesteryear and today.

The only things I don't really care for in "I Should Know That" are the quick ending phrase and a very brief middle section, both of which are heavier than the rest of the tune and feature nasal-sounding, distorted guitars and a beat that seems way out of character with the rest of the song. A minor niggle on a great song.

"Portray" is a mellow, pensive number that begins with a lilting classical guitar intro by Dowdle and continues with lovely percussion textures, ethereal (but barely noticeable) synths and tasty piano backdrops.

"Understand Me" begins with swirling, machine-like techno beats, moody chordal work on the piano, and bass lines with a distinctly vocal, vowel-esque quality. The vocals — both lead and backup — are again amazing, as are the revved-up drum beats, slamming bass lines, spacey synth noises and rollicking trumpet blasts.

In all, Jibe jibes. I suggest that anyone who can appreciate a wonderful combination of smooth soul and funk-i-fied modernism give some support to this great local duo. Yes they're that good. These guys belong on the airwaves.

Shawn Hammond is an experienced guitarist and regular contributor to Guitar Player magazine.

Christmas programs fill TV

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Why cozy up to the fireplace this season when television is so eager to warm you with holiday cheer?

The gift-wrapped offerings include sentimental favorites such as "A Charlie Brown Christmas" and the movie classic "It's a Wonderful Life," and new shows featuring Ricky Martin, Olympic skaters and assorted celebrities.

There's a slate of ambitious New Year's Eve specials in honor of the millennium, including one in which ABC anchor Peter Jennings plays marathon man with a 23-hour global look at the arrival of 2000.

So pour the eggnog, pull on those festive reindeer slippers and settle back. Here are the highlights (all times EST):

MOVIES:

— "A Christmas Carol" is revisited in a new TNT version of Charles Dickens' tale, starring Patrick Stewart as Scrooge and featuring Richard E. Grant and Joel Grey. Debuts 8 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 5, repeating through Saturday, Dec. 25.

— "Santa and Pete," starring James Earl Jones and Hume Cronyn, is based on a Dutch legend and recounts how Santa's little-known partner, Pete, may have saved Christmas. At 9 p.m. Sunday, Dec. 5, on CBS.

— "Cinderelmo," billed as a "Sesame Street-style" retelling of "Cinderella," stars Keri Russell, French Stewart and Muppets Elmo, Grover and Kermit the Frog. Airing 8 p.m. Monday, Dec. 6, on Fox.

— "If You Believe," 9 p.m. Monday, Dec. 6, on Lifetime, stars Ally Walker as a stressed-out book editor who rediscovers what's important in life in this modern take on "A Christmas Carol."

— "A Holiday Romance," 9 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 8, CBS, stars Naomi Judd and Gerald McRaney as a school superintendent and music teacher who clash over the cancellation of a high school's music program.

"Our coaches and players are also excited to be playing in a domed stadium for the first time in school history. We're looking forward to spending the Christmas season in Detroit and invite our fans to join us for an exciting event."

The opportunity to play in the Motor City Bowl was first presented to BYU head coach LaVell Edwards a little over a week ago. Edwards said he was excited about the possibility of playing a quality opponent from the MAC and said it seemed like the most intriguing matchup for the Cougars.

"We are delighted to have BYU in the Motor City Bowl," executive director Ken Hoffman said in a news release. "BYU's national appeal, combined with its national ranking and great reputation, offer an outstanding opponent for the MAC champion. We know the television rating will be high, as will the enthusiasm in the Silverdome."

BYU has never played in a domed stadium and has never battled Marshall. Should Marshall win Friday, the Cougars would be facing an undefeated team in a bowl game for the second straight year.

If Western Michigan upsets Marshall on Friday, BYU will face the Broncos for the sixth time in school history, with the Cougars holding a 3-2 series edge.

Late-game dive costs men in Arizona

Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — Rick Anderson had 10 of his career-high 16 points in a crucial stretch of the second half as the No. 4 Wildcats beat BYU 86-62 on Wednesday night.

Michael Wright had 19 points and 10 rebounds to help the Wildcats (5-0), the Preseason NIT champions, end BYU's shot at its first 3-0 start in eight years. The victory was No. 400 for coach Lute Olson (400-120) early in his 17th season at Arizona.

Mekeli Wesley had 24 points and 10 rebounds for the Cougars (2-1), who were averaging 91.5 points after routs of California Riverside and Southern Utah. Terrell Lyday scored 18 points.

Wright also led Arizona scorers last season, when the Wildcats beat BYU in overtime in Provo. But Michael Vranes, who had 20 points for the Cougars in that game, got in foul trouble early and was held to six in this one.

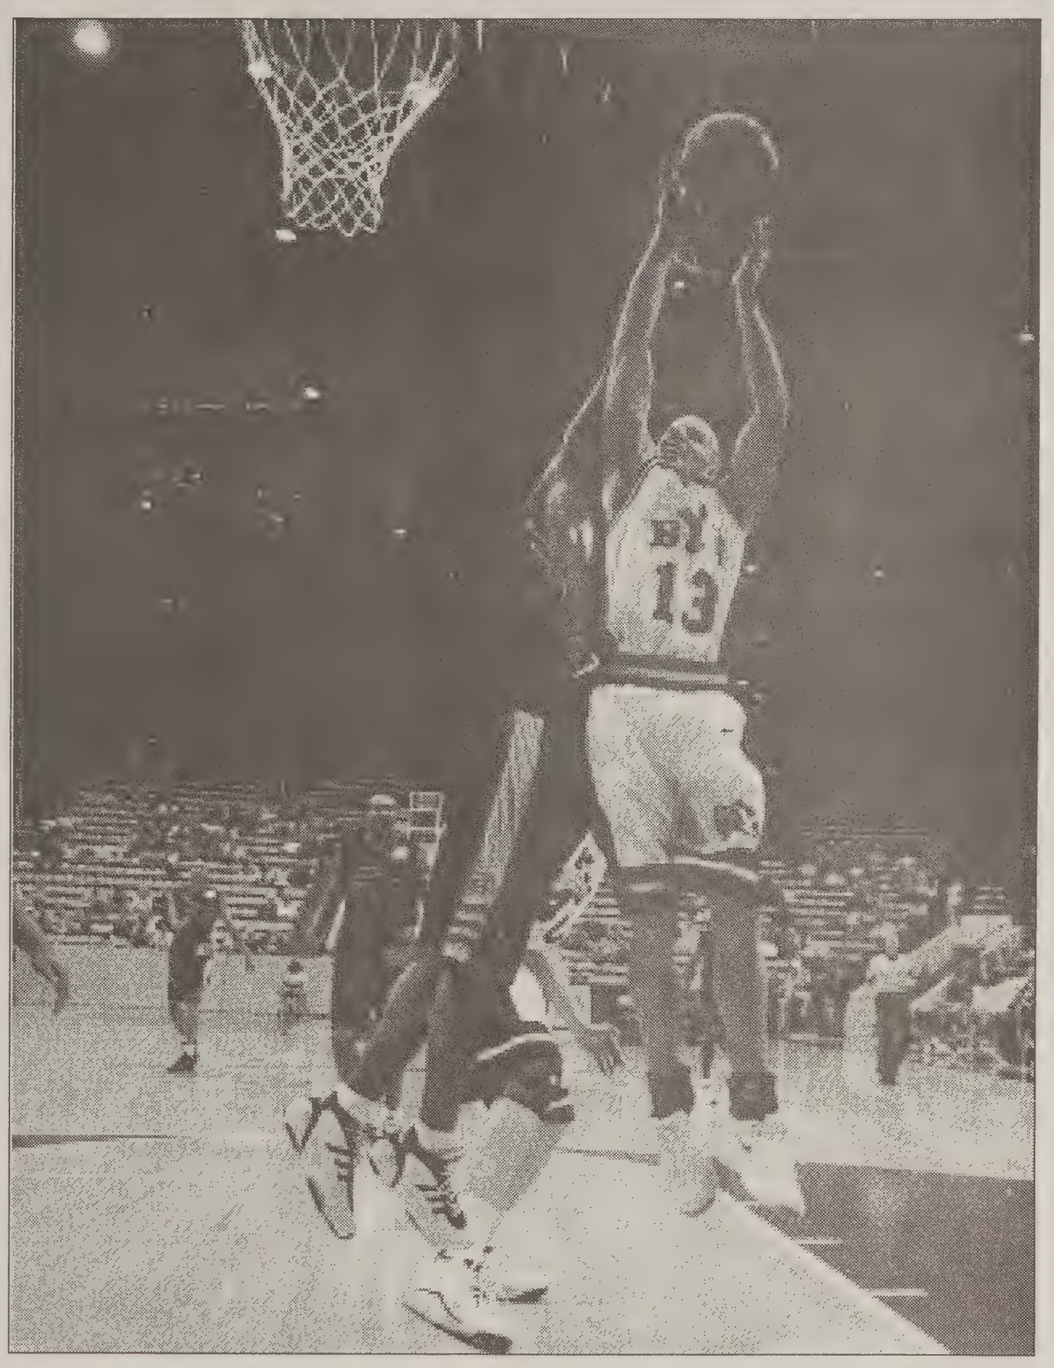
The Cougars were tenacious in the first half and the first seven minutes of the second.

Arizona led 38-29 at halftime, and Wright scored five points in the first 1:21 of the second half, helping the Wildcats open a 45-32 lead.

But Wesley had eight points during a 10-0, three-minute run by BYU that got the Cougars within two, 48-46, with 13:33 left in the game. A key spot in the surge came when Wesley intercepted a pass underneath Arizona's basket, and Olson drew a technical for protesting a non-call.

Wesley made both free throws.

But Anderson took over, driving the baseline for a layup and making four free throws in 60 seconds, giving Arizona a 54-46 lead with 11:37 to play. With 10;37 to go, Gilbert Arenas tipped in a missed free throw, opening a 10-point lead, and the Wildcats won going away.



BYU's Michael Vranes goes up for a layup during a game Nov. 16 at the Marriott Center. The Cougars lost 86-62 at Arizona on Wednesday night.

Thorn's threes lead Cougars to win

By JENNIFER GROSKREUTZ

Freshman guard Erin Thorn helped the Cougars get the win they were looking for Wednesday night in the Smith Fieldhouse.

The BYU women's basketball team blew out Idaho State 68-47, aided in part by seven three-pointers from Thorn.

> "I've been off the last couple of games. I knew what I needed to do, and I did it."
> —Erin Thorn, guard

BYU head coach Trent Shippen said Thorn plays with confidence, which is one of the reasons she's seeing so much playing time as a freshman.

"She's considered one of the best three-point shooters in the country," he said.

Thorn scored the first basket for the Cougars in the first minute of the game. Senior forward Lori Cuff came off the bench after sitting out the last three games due to a knee injury and also scored in the first half.

Three-pointers characterized the beginning of the game for the Cougars. BYU recorded six of them in the first half — three belonged to Thorn — while Idaho only scored one.

Thorn said she was hoping to play better last night than she had been in the last few games.

"I've been off the last couple of games. I knew what I needed to do, and I did it," she said.

Senior forward Cady Williams helped increase the Cougars' lead at halftime to 35-21 when, with nine seconds left, she swooshed the ball into the net after two BYU players couldn't get it in.

BYU opened the second-half scoring again in the first minute of play. Jill Adams nailed the basket right at the shot-clock buzzer. Minutes later, Williams turned around and scored at the buzzer as well.

Idaho's Mandi Carver was the Bengals' only hope against the Cougars high-scoring team. Carver lead her team with eight points in the second half, 12 total in the game. No other Bengal scored even half as many points.

Adams said that overall, she thought the Cougars offense needed improvement.

But defensively she said the team was consistent.

"We watched the tapes and we prepared well for this team," she said.

BYU received one vote in the AP poll last week, Shippen said. He said that fact made Wednesday night's win even better.

"This was a big game for us," he said. "We got one vote in the AP polls. That's the first time that's happened since I've been a coach here."

At 5 a.m. today the women's basketball team left for a tournament in Kansas City. The tournament will kick off a five-game road-trip for the Cougars.

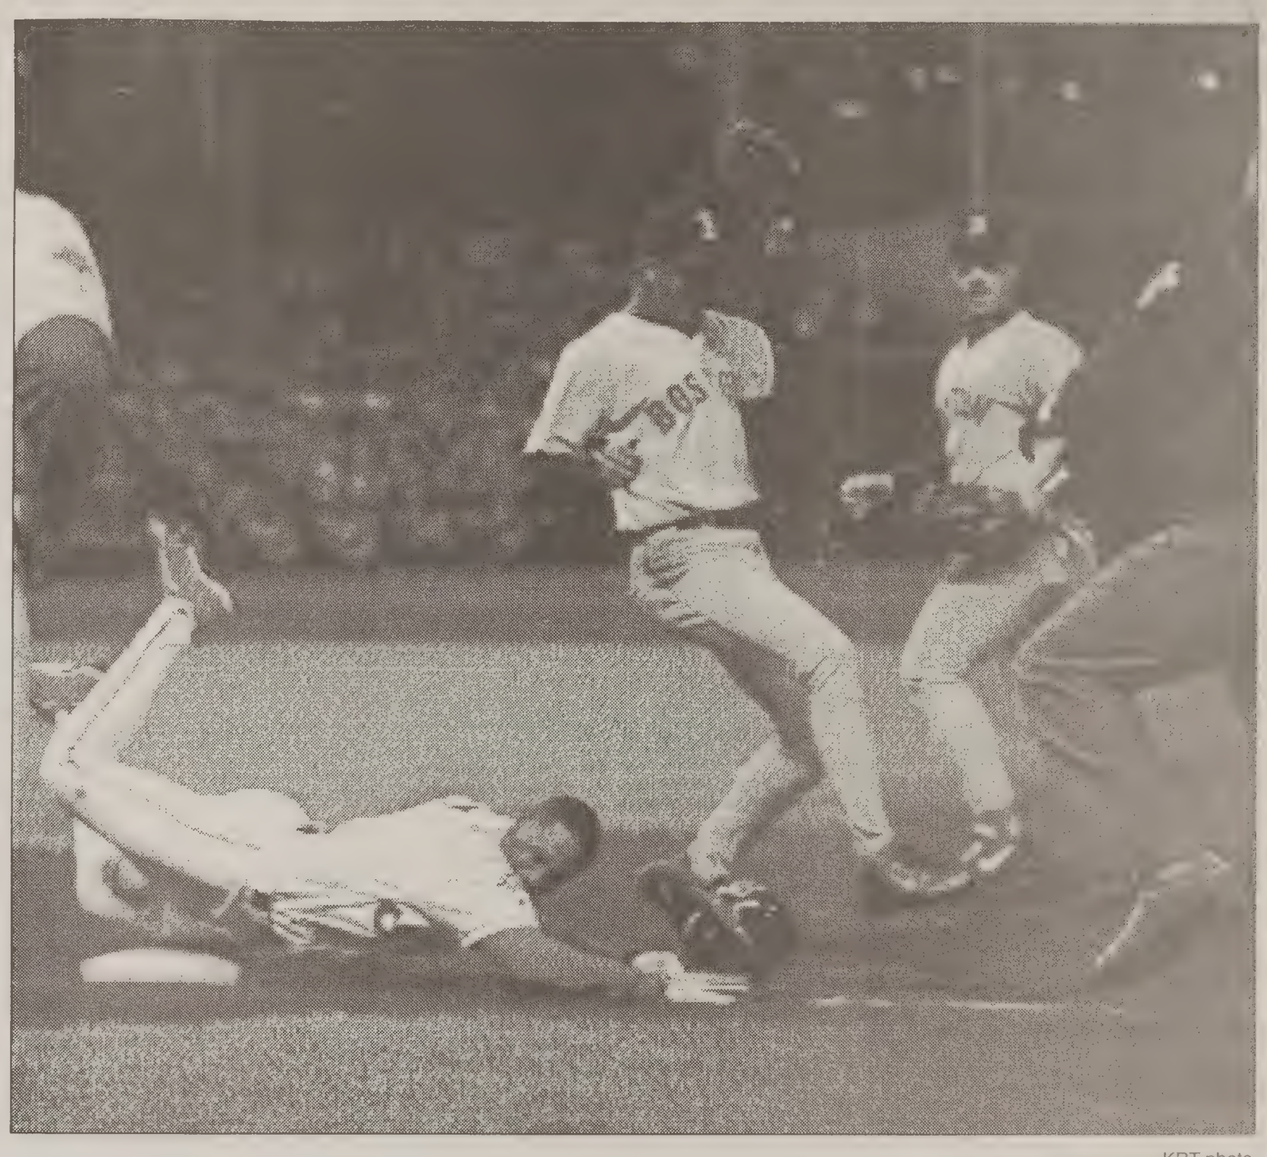
Lofton injury may cost half a season

Associated Press



KRT photo

Kenny Lofton slides into first base during a game Oct. 11 at Jacobs Field. Lofton dislocated his shoulder on the play and may have surgery that could sideline him until the middle of next season.

CLEVELAND — It's no secret the Cleveland Indians are in the market for some pitching help. Now, their shopping list may include a center fielder, leadoff man, base stealing threat and Gold Glove winner, too.

Kenny Lofton will likely have surgery on a torn rotator cuff in his left shoulder that could sideline him until next season's All-Star break.

"This hurts. It's a setback," Indians general manager John Hart said Wednesday. "It's a tough blow, but not a devastating one."

See why you shouldn't slide into first base, kids?

Lofton sustained the injury while diving headfirst into first base during Game 5 of the AL playoffs against the Boston Red Sox. Last week, Lofton was told by team orthopedist Dr. Lou Keppler that a muscle in the shoulder was torn and he needed surgery.

With the Indians' blessing, Lofton got a second opinion and visited renowned orthopedic surgeon Dr. James Andrews, who confirmed Keppler's diagnosis and also recommended surgery.

Lofton has not yet decided when or if to have the procedure, Hart said.

"Kenny is now evaluating his options," said Hart, who spoke with Lofton for a half-hour on Tuesday. "He's really down about it. He really wants to play."

Lofton is expected to make a decision in the next week to 10 days and the Indians will support whatever it is, Hart said. If he opts for surgery, Lofton would be out for a minimum of five months and a maximum of seven.

"He's going to listen to his heart," Hart said. "You can't force a guy to have surgery."

Lofton's agent, Casey Close, would not comment on his client's situation. However, he did say Lofton, a six-time All-Star, was in Atlanta.

> "It's a tough blow, but not a devastating one."
> John Hart, Indians general manager

While Lofton is sidelined, the Indians could use a platoon of Jacob Cruz and Dave Roberts in center or sign a free agent. Among the players currently available are Tom Goodwin and Brian McRae.

"We may not do anything, but we're going to look," Hart said. "It's (Lofton's injury) not a full season. Fortunately, we had two guys who played there a bit last season when Kenny was out."

Lofton hit .301 with seven homers and 39 RBIs last season, but played in just 120 games because of a hamstring injury. He got off to a great start in '99, batting .386 in April, but his production fell off dramatically in the second half.

Cruz batted .330 with three home runs and 17 RBIs in 88 at-bats. He was doing a nice job filling in before tearing a ligament in his right thumb sliding into second base in August.

Roberts, who has better speed than Cruz, batted .238 with 12 RBIs in 143 at-bats, and stole 11 bases.

Hart didn't say if Cleveland would now become a factor in the bidding for Seattle superstar Ken Griffey Jr., who has asked the Mariners to trade him.

However, Hart is approaching the free-agent market with an eye on the Class of 2000 which could include Griffey, Indians right fielder Manny Ramirez, Seattle's Alex Rodriguez and Toronto's Carlos Delgado as well as some top-flight pitchers.

As for immediate pitching help, Hart said he has expressed interest in several free agent pitchers, including Scott Kamieniecki, Graeme Lloyd, Allen Watson and Rich Rodriguez.

"Kammy is a guy we like," Hart said of Kamieniecki, who pitched for Baltimore last season. "He's a swing guy who can pitch out of the bullpen and start. That's something we were missing last year."

The Indians are also now without a closer after Mike Jackson signed a one-year, $3 million deal with the Philadelphia Phillies.

Hart let Jackson walk because the GM has never been willing to pay big money for a closer, preferring to a balanced bullpen instead. As for next season, Hart said he would expect the team to find its closer on the current roster, with Paul Shuey or Steve Karsay likely to get the job.

Sympathy for Rose hard to come by

By JIM LITKE
AP Sports Writer

It was easier to support Pete Rose before he became a cause.

And a shill, talk-show host, casino glad-hander, card-show mercenary and museum operator in Cooperstown, N.Y. — just a few doors down from the Hall of Fame.

And now that he's become a jailhouse lawyer, too, well, it's becoming harder still.

Whoever slapped the nickname "Charlie Hustle" on Rose knew something. Because he went on TV the same night he was kicked out of baseball, and without so much as a segue, started selling balls — autographed, naturally — for $39 each. Ten years later, Rose is still selling everything he can get his hands on.

Tuesday it was a Web site that will auction sports collectibles and memorabilia (including Pete's, presumably), sell sports gifts and "experiences" (involving Pete, presumably) and offer games that are both "rewarding" and "addictive" (something Pete knows plenty about).

We say "presumably" because only a few parts of the site are up and running. Those include a biography of Rose, an interview with him, and the only "official" online petition visitors can sign to support Pete's reinstatement or vote against it.

The final tally won't be announced for some time, but by 6 p.m. Tuesday, 90,000 people had expressed their opinion. And if previous polls are any indication, 75 percent will want Rose back in baseball. If commissioner Bud Selig went along at some point, the matter would fall into the laps of the baseball writers, where the same margin would get Pete elected to the Hall.

Make no mistake: The public got this one right. He belongs. Without recounting statistics, it's enough to say Rose is the career hits leader and that he collected them all during one of baseball's golden ages.

Much was made when Tony Gwynn and Wade Boggs crashed the 3,000-hit barrier this summer, and even more when Robin Yount and George Brett did it a few summers ago. Now think about this: each of them would need eight to 10 more great seasons just to find into Pete's neighborhood.

Of course, none of them bet on baseball. Rose still insists he didn't, either, while managing the Cincinnati Reds. Unfortunately, he also signed the document that got him thrown out of baseball in August 1989, acknowledging then-commissioner Bart Giamatti had a "factual basis" for imposing the lifetime ban called for under Rule 21 (d).

Despite Rose's increasingly desperate tactics, and the sympathetic bounce he got from Jim Gray's inquisition at the World Series six weeks ago, nothing really has changed. He says he has evidence baseball's lawyers "blackmailed" witnesses. He says he has experts who will shred the experts that found his handwriting and fingerprints on betting slips.

But this single devastating quote from Fay Vincent, who succeeded Giamatti as commissioner and worked as his trusted aide during the Rose investigation, should remove any doubts:

"You'd say to him, `Pete, all these calls from the bookie, there are hundreds of them. Here are the phone records. It's the summertime. No basketball and football. What were you and the bookie talking about? If you weren't making the calls, who was making the call? Come on, Pete.'

"And he'd say, `I dunno.' No answer. You see the deposition, there's just no response. And that's because there is no answer," Vincent said.

Rose should get his shot at reinstatement, and apparently he will. Baseball's top lawyer, Bob DuPuy, will meet with Rose and his attorney and carry the information back to the commissioner, with whom the decision on reinstatement ultimately rests. Selig said there is no time frame for taking action and nothing for Rose to pin his hopes on.

Fans have short memories. It's almost a guarantee that if you've actually done the time, most of them won't remember the crime. But the responsibilities of those in charge of the game should extend farther out than that.

Rose raised the price of admission himself. His threats and his calculated attempts to blur the facts deserve an equal and measured reply. The answer to the question, "How many more pounds of Rose's flesh does baseball want?" is simple. One more.

If Rose wants in, make him admit the sin that locked him out in the first place.

Yes, there are drunks and rogues and racists and even liars already enshrined in Cooperstown. But none of them made a point of rubbing that fact in our faces.

quarterback Jim Miller chases a loose fumbling in the third quarter Nov. 25 at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich. Miller was suspended Wednesday for violating NFL drug policy.

agent Joe Linta requested a second test, allowed league policy. They were informed Monday it also was positive, meaning that Miller was pension.

id traces of the banned substance came from Miller's limited use of the backup supplement, which neither he nor Miller would identify.

Miller was earning $400,000 this season so missing four games costs him about $100,000.

"So I'm paying for more than that, and my teammates are paying for more than that," Miller said.

Linta said there would no appeal because "we don't believe in lying and making up excuses."

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said he thinks Miller is the first quarterback to be suspended under the league's drug policy.

Miller is also the third player to be suspended for drugs in the last two weeks. The others, both for steroids, were to New York Giants rookie safety Lyle West and New York Jets tackle Jason Ferguson.

The NFL's policy on steroids and related substances says "players are responsible for what is in their bodies."

Bears trainer Tim Bream said all players receive a list of banned substances during the offseason. He said approved supplements can be used to help the body recover from weight lifting and reduce the buildup of byproducts in the body.

Miller's improbable rise this year has been one of the team's success stories. He started one NFL game before this season and did not play a down in 1997 or 1998.

Shane Matthews, who won the starting job to begin the season before being injured, will start Sunday against Green Bay with rookie Cade McNown the backup.

Miller told most of his teammates Wednesday his season was over.

"I think the team was in shock today," Matthews said. "Jim handled it in a first-class manner. It was tough on him. He didn't do it to hurt the team. It was an honest mistake."

No. 20 Utah upset in Ogden

Associated Press

OGDEN — Eddie Gill scored a career-high 25 points and Harold "The Show" Arceneaux, scoreless in the first half, added 15 as Weber State beat No. 20 Utah 84-72 on Wednesday night.

It was a tale of two halves for Weber State (3-1) and Arceneaux, who spent most of the first 20 minutes on the bench with two fouls.

Weber State coach Joe Cravens, an assistant to Rick Majerus at Utah in 1990, beat his old boss as the Wildcats extended their home-court winning streak to 26 games and ended a four-game losing streak to the Utes (2-2).

Weber State trailed 31-25 at halftime but came out of the locker room determined. Arceneaux drove for a basket 18 seconds into the second half and from that moment the Wildcats and their excited fans continued to build momentum.

Weber State opened the half with a 14-6 run and took the lead for good at 38-37 on a 3-pointer by Shawn Moore with 16:43 to play.

Alex Jensen led Utah with 15 points, but the Utes hurt themselves with 17 turnovers and allowed Weber State's athleticism to make it a fullcourt game in the second half.

Gill, a speedy point guard, played 40 minutes and didn't disappoint the 10 NBA scouts who attended. Fans chanted "Eddie, Eddie, Eddie" after each of his baskets, but he also led the Wildcats with 10 rebounds and eight assists.

When Ivan Gatto got free for a dunk and was fouled by Jeremy Killion with 4:16 remaining, the crowd of 10,869 went wild. Gatto, who scored 14 points, made the ensuing free throw and the Wildcats led 70-58.

It was even louder two minutes later when Gill lofted a fast-break pass from halfcourt for Arceneaux, who slid past a defender and flipped a reverse layup into the basket to make it 76-60.

Tired. And True. GENERAL TIRE

Tired yet? Treat your tires to SIPE'EM

BETTER TRACTION ON WET OR ICY ROADS. Tire ribs separate and expose the sharp edges for positive traction starts and acceleration in all weather conditions. Spin on snow and ice is drastically redused. Hydroplaning on wet or snowy roads is also minimized for extra saftey.

TESTS PROVE UP TO 20% EXTENDED TIRE LIFE. Saf-Tee siped tires have been proven to last longer than ordinary tires in exhaustive road tests. The U.S. Air Force and The National Safety Council have demonstrated the advantages of the Saf-Tee siping process.

Ski ads cause some to frown

SALT LAKE CITY — "Proud host of ZERO Olympic events," brags the ad for Brighton ski resort.

It doesn't have Olympics boosters smiling. They also aren't rolling on the floor, laughing out loud over the resort's ski school promotion promising: "You don't need an Olympic Committee to get into this school."

The reference to Salt Lake bid boosters having paid for scholarships for relatives of International Olympic Committee members might be lost on the audience, but maybe they'll get the point from a radio ad.

It has a caller to Olympic headquarters asking about free ski passes given away to relatives of the IOC and saying, "Don't they know at Brighton kids under 10 ski free?"

Officials with the resort's advertising agency, Spiker Communications of Missoula, Mont., say their ads are designed to be noticed but are not anti-Olympics.

"We aren't dissing the Olympics," said Brighton marketing manager Dan Malstrom. "The Olympics are going to be great for Utah, but that's just not what we are all about."

> "We don't have a big Olympic event to boast about like some of the other resorts, so we're trying to have a little fun with that."
> — Wes Spiker, advertising executive

"We don't have a big Olympic event to boast about like some of the other resorts, so we're trying to have a little fun with that," advertising executive Wes Spiker said.

Spiker said he has heard through the grapevine that some of Utah's Olympic officials are none too pleased.

"If Utah really has put this scandal and some of the other stuff behind them, then the majority of the people will find them funny, too," he said. "Market research shows people only remember ads that are really funny or really awful. We wanted to be remembered as one of the really funny ones."

The Salt Lake Organizing Committee referred questions about the ads to the U.S. Olympic Committee in Colorado Springs, Colo.

"It's really a USOC matter," said SLOC spokeswoman Shelley Thomas. She said the Olympic and Amateur Sports Act of 1998 gives the USOC exclusive use of the word Olympic for "the purpose of trade, to induce the sale of any goods or services."Officials could not be reached for comment.

N. Ireland cabinet takes control

Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ireland — The clock ticked down on Northern Ireland's bitter past Wednesday as Britain prepared to hand substantial powers to a new Belfast administration of Protestants and Catholics, a giant step toward peace after 30 brutal, bloody years.

The transfer of authority at midnight (5 p.m. MST) challenges local politicians to forge a future built on compromise and mutual respect, the central goal of last year's Good Friday peace accord. Northern Ireland parties have rarely displayed those qualities during 27 years of so-called "direct rule" from London, but this week agreed to share a Cabinet table together.

"With the full political settlement about to be implemented, we have the strongest possible basis for permanent peace in Ireland, such as has never before been experienced in our history," Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern told lawmakers Wednesday.

In Dublin, senior British and Irish officials were expected to sign treaties Thursday that authorize the closest political relations between the two nations since most of Ireland successfully rebelled against British rule in 1922.

Today's treaties will authorize the creation of a British-Irish Council bringing together legislators from Britain and both parts of Ireland, and a whole series of cooperative policy-shaping committees between the Dublin and Belfast administrations.

Ahern will then issue a declaration authorizing the immediate amendment of the Irish Republic's 1937 constitution to drop its territorial claim to Northern Ireland.

Ireland's constitutional change had been on hold as a dispute between rival parties in Northern Ireland over Irish Republican Army disarmament held up the formation of a coalition Cabinet for the province.

That 12-member Cabinet was formed Monday after Ulster Unionist leader David Trimble dropped his Protestant party's demand for IRA disarmament in advance. It will hold its first meeting today.

Ahern said the change to the constitution, overwhelmingly endorsed by voters last year, would prove "that there is no longer any political disagreement about the constitutional status of Northern Ireland."

The Irish government and the Cabinet in Belfast have agreed to hold an inaugural summit meeting Dec. 13 in Armagh.

Justices question tobacco regulation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration's groundbreaking effort to curb smoking ran into trouble Wednesday as most Supreme Court justices expressed doubts the government has the authority to regulate tobacco as an addictive drug.

Such regulation by the Food and Drug Administration "just doesn't fit" under a federal law that requires the FDA to ensure drugs that are safe and effective, said Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.

"Is it the position of the government that the use of tobacco is safe and effective?" she asked Solicitor General Seth Waxman. The government has asked the justices to overturn a lower court ruling and let the FDA regulate tobacco and crack down on sales to minors.

Waxman contended the FDA has the authority to act because the nicotine contained in tobacco is "highly addictive" and acts as a stimulant, a sedative and an appetite suppressant and feeds smokers' addictions.

But tobacco industry lawyer Richard M. Cooper insisted the government's action was "lawless" because cigarettes are not promoted as having positive effects on health.

Several justices seemed concerned about the industry's argument that if FDA regulation were allowed, it would have to ban tobacco products.

"We tried a ban of (alcohol) and decided, forget about it," Justice Antonin Scalia said.

Scalia said that even if a 1938 law could give the FDA authority to regulate tobacco, "There's a lot of water over the dam since then" during which the government said it could not regulate the industry.

All 50 states have reached settlements in which tobacco companies will pay them $246 billion for the cost of treating smoking-related illnesses. The Justice Department sued the industry in September, seeking additional billions of dollars to repay federal health-insurance costs.

The FDA said its decision to start regulating tobacco in 1996 was prompted by new evidence that the industry intended its products to feed consumers' nicotine habits.

All 50 states already ban tobacco sales to anyone under 18. In addition to adopting that rule, the FDA required stores to demand photo I.D. from all tobacco purchasers under age 27 and limited vending-machine cigarette sales to adults-only locations, such as bars.

Tobacco companies challenged the rule, and the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last year that the FDA could not regulate tobacco. "Congress never intended to give the FDA jurisdiction over tobacco products," the appeals court said.

CASH for BOOKS

SATURDAY DECEMBER 11TH THROUGH SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18TH

60% TEXTBOOK BUYBACK

Prices are Rounded to the Nearest Dollar A lower national wholesale price may be offered for textbooks not needed by BYU.

The Buy Back Story

1. We are buying back books which instructors have requested as texts for future semesters.
2. We buy back books that are on our list at 60% of the new (not used) price.
3. We resell our used books at 75% of the new price.
4. The books must be the current edition, the correct volume, number, in good condition, etc.
5. If any of your books are not on our list, the reasons are as follows:
   A. We have not received a written request from the faculty for future classroom use.
   B. It is an old edition, programmed text, etc.
   C. In a very few cases, we're overstocked and cannot send the overstock back to the publisher.
   D. We have bought back the maximum limit based on what the instructors have submitted as their classroom enrollment

- Most stores pay no more than 50% of what you paid for the book. We are one of the very few that offer you 60% of the current new price.
- Nebraska Book Co. will make you an offer on most of the books that we cannot buy back. The price they offer depends on the national resale market.
- We at the Bookstore understand the frustrations of exam week and have made an extra effort to buy back as many books as possible.
